INDIA: Links between sugar and diabetes challenged

Can sugar be the sole culprit for making India the diabetes capital of the world? Well, if some experts and sugar industry representatives are to be believed, the sweetener is being unnecessarily dragged into the controversy over rising cases of diabetes in the country, especially as a host of factors, including sedentary lifestyle and growing urbanisation, are causing diabetes, according to India's Business Standard newspaper.

To truly improve sustainability, Prana recommends focusing first on agriculture, not packaging

08-Mar-2019 By Elizabeth Crawford

When it comes to improving sustainability, most of the focus is placed on reducing packaging, especially if it is plastic, but according to the co-founder of snack brand Prana, companies could see a greater impact if they focused first on their agricultural footprint.
